THREE QUESTIONS is a guided improvisation for any number of performers of any type. Each question is split across four pages, dividing it into four equal parts. Before each performance, the total duration for each question should be determined using an agreed upon criteria or method. During the performance a clock should be visible to the performers so that this duration is realized. Each question can have a different duration.

The performers should use these questions, and their own answers to them, to guide their performance on a conceptual level. If so desired, the questions may be vocalized, though any answers may not be. The goal is to consider and explore the relationship of sound and performance.

A large black question mark is centered in the middle of the page. It is surrounded by numerous smaller question marks of varying sizes, creating a dense, patterned effect. The background is white.
